Data Bus Notes:

Beginning as early as 1996, automobile manufacturers, most notably General Motors, began incorporating a digital communication protocol network in some of their vehicles. This digital network allows different control modules in the vehicle to communicate with one another in order to perform certain tasks. The vehicle radio unit has become more and more a part of this digital network. The radio unit switched power, for example, is fully controlled by the data network so that the radio can be turned on or off whenever needed by the system. This is seen most obviously in the way the radio stays on for a period of time after the key is turned off and until the driver door is opened. This control also allows use of the radio amplifier circuits to handle reproduction of audio for emergency systems such as GM's OnStar system and the vehicle warning chimes and turn signal clicks heard through one or both of the vehicle speakers.

In addition to all of this, as the use of this digital communication has progressed, many new vehicles are now incorporating audio system amplifiers that are digitally controlled by the radio. With all of this in mind, you can see that changing out the radio in many late model vehicles poses new challenges to the installer. Fortunately, aftermarket manufacturers are doing a pretty good job of staying on top of things with regards to producing proper interfacing electronics that allow for changing out these newer radios.

This Installation Solutions guide is designed to help you determine which part will allow proper replacement of the OE radio unit. You will notice that there are three columns for harness / interfacing adapters for each vehicle. The first column is our recommended harness for the application, the second column lists the basic harness adapter that matches the plug in the dash, but does not interface with the data bus system in the vehicle, and the third column lists the harness necessary to properly interface with vehicles having factory amplifier systems. To make an informed choice, it is recommended that you determine, in detail, what features the vehicle in question has and what features the customer wishes to retain.

Please remember, improper interfacing that does not retain factory warning chimes can be considered tampering with a federally mandated vehicle safety system. All responsibility for improper interfacing is that of the installing dealer and the vehicle owner.

J. L. Troy Company only recommends proper interfacing.

On the next page, you will find a chart that lists the basic features of the Data Bus interfacing modules that we currently stock. Use the part number that you selected from the application chart above and match it with the same number on the left of this chart to determine what features the interface is capable of retaining. This chart will also allow you to compare interfaces if you are given a choice for the application.

Multi - Kit notes:

General Comments: Generally, when a Multi-purpose kit is referred to for a GM vehicle ranging in years from approximately 1974 thru 2002, it will be for the standard DIN and a half size radio (not double DIN size), sometimes referred to as the J-2000 style. In this case, ALL of the kits listed below can be made to fit. However, different kits have different features and may include a different assortment of bracketry. If the factory radio brackets are present and removeable, then a kit that does not include brackets will save you money and time. However, if the factory radio brackets are not available or are not removeable, then be sure to pick a kit that includes brackets. Most installers have their own personal preferences regarding GM multi-kits, so we offer them all for your convenience and provide the handy comparison chart below to help with your decision.

American Intl. Multi notes: Typically found in reference to American International kits in standard General Motors vehicles dating from 1974 thru approx. 2000.

- Kits that include bracketing are: GMK454, GMK444, GMK440, GMK434 (Factory brackets can also be used with these kits)
- Kits that require the use of factory radio brackets are: GMK121, GMK123

Scosche Multi notes: Typically found in reference to Scosche kits in standard General Motors vehicles dating from 1982 thru approx. 2000.

- Kits that include brackets are: 1500B, 1503B, 1505B, 1507B, 1517B (Factory brackets can also be used with these kits)
- Kits that require the use of factory radio brackets are: 1508B

*See chart below for specific kit features.

Pocket notes:

Typically found in reference to vehicles that are factory equipped with a Double-DIN sized radio.

- In cases where the factory radio is installed with a factory pocket, most aftermarket DIN sized radios can be ISO mounted with the factory pocket in the factory brackets with no need for a specialized dash kit.
- In cases where the factory radio is full Double-Din in size, use one of the following pockets with a single DIN aftermarket radio and the factory radio brackets: UPK750, UPK800, 2150B, 2152B.
- In cases, as in some domestic and European vehicles, where the Double-DIN sized radio is simply clipped into the dash, you can often combine a standard DIN sized aftermarket radio with a universal pocket to achieve the proper fitment.
- If factory radio brackets are not present, refer to specific kit listing or consult your JLTroy salesperson.
